French Studies is a major offered by the Classical and European Studies (CES) Department. The French Studies program offers courses in topics such as medieval courtly love to French philosophy since the Enlightenment, from post-colonial Africa to social issues in contemporary France, from women in the nineteenth-century literary imagination to the art of reading and interpretation with a focus not just on the literary and linguistic but also on gender and visual art, history and medicine, post-colonialism and critical theory.

The majority of courses are offered entirely in French but some select courses are also offered in English (some of these in collaboration with the other majors offered by the Classical and European Studies department).

French Studies does not currently offer an academic program at the graduate level.
